This capstone is a testimonio of the process I have gone through in confronting, unpacking, and understanding my mixed-race identity. In this project, I detail my difficult unlearning process as a white Chicana and explore the ways I have perpetuated harm due to that privilege. Dealing with colorism, white supremacy, and nuanced conversations about identity negotiation, this project is a culmination of years of personal and academic work.

About the Presenter

Delena Humble-Fischer is a soon-to-be graduate of the Narrative Studies MA program at ASU. Her primary research interests include Latinx/Chicanx identity negotiation, ethical story representation, and genre bending. During her time at ASU, she has served as the primary research assistant to New York Times bestselling author Jewell Parker Rhodes. In her free time, she enjoys spending time outside, reading, or playing with her two cats.
