If so, then this session is for you!

In collaboration with Dr. Jack Truten (UPenn), the Lincoln Center for Applied Ethics at ASU is offering an opportunity for ASU students who work as medical scribes to informally write about and discuss their clinical experiences. Because patient charts include only particular kinds of information, other aspects of the clinical encounter—like moments that are confusing, uncomfortable, funny, or tragic—are left out. We think that medical scribes should have the opportunity to reflect on these experiences and talk about them with other people.

This process is sometimes called narrative medicine, and these sessions are usually held with medical students, residents, and practicing clinicians. However, at ASU, we want to encourage reflective medical practice earlier, and we are offering you this unique opportunity to participate.

Come join us!

When: Friday, March 18th 2:00-3:30pm
Where: Tempe Campus Life Sciences A 101

RSVP: https://lincolncenter.asu.edu/reflective-scribe