Friday, September 21, 2018 | 6:30 – 8:30 p.m.

South Mountain Community College | Performing Arts Center
7050 S. 24th St., Phoenix

Ten years after the election of Barack Obama, the nation's first African American president, America still is walking the line between hope and hate. How might we engage in honest explorations of America's past, present and future that will encourage reflection, discourse, and foster change?

Calvin Terrell, an acclaimed thought leader in and beyond Arizona, will use rhetoric, art, science and religion as lenses through which we can consider this moment of possibility and civic responsibility. Join us as Terrell delivers a dynamic, interactive lecture that examines the past decade and inspires each person to take an active role in influencing and shaping the future of their communities.

Calvin Terrell is the founder and lead facilitator of Social Centric Institute (SCI), an organization designed to provide education and training for all ages to enhance human interactions and global progress. For more than twenty years, he has lectured, trained and lead comprehensive workshops for valuing diversity, equity and justice building in schools, corporations and civic organizations throughout the United States.

Terrell is an educator and healer at his core. He employs techniques that are engaging, relevant to all populations, multidisciplinary and integrate technology and research with storytelling and visualization. His greatest motivations are his marriage of more than 20 years, four children, faith, and service to humanity. Terrell is a vigilant spiritual evolutionary, servant of justice and peaceful warrior of critical thought.
